Edoardo Costa is an Italian actor, entrepreneur and philanthropist. Fluent in English, Italian, Portuguese, Spanish, and French, Costa's journey into the world of entertainment began during his military service in the mid-80s when he was discovered by a modeling scout in a local Milanese restaurant bar. Costa has immersed himself in diverse cultures, spending time in South America, Europe, and Asia. He emerged as the face and image of renowned designers such as Giorgio Armani, Versace, Christian Dior, and many others. Establishing connections in the industry, Costa's friendship with Quincy Jones became a catalyst to support impactful projects in Afghanistan, Brazil, and Africa. Costa ventured into American films, culminating in a significant role as Emerson in the fourth installment of the Die Hard series, "Live Free or Die Hard." His film career further blossomed with a pivotal role in the drama "Down The Shore" and an appearance alongside Liam Neeson in "Non-Stop."
